Introduction

This document describes how Community Justice Scotland will deliver learning and development and encourage innovation to drive forward our actions in pursuit of our aim to make Scotland the safest country in the world. Our activities will be undertaken with the involvement of stakeholders, including people with lived experience, to ensure that we are able to deliver excellence based on local needs and with outcomes focused on people. The Learning, Development and Innovation Strategy will support the organisation's overall objectives as identified in the Corporate Plan 2017 – 2020.

Community Justice Scotland has a duty to support and lead on the adoption of best practice and innovation, to build capacity in the workforce to promote inclusion, citizenship and desistance.

This strategy will therefore outline how learning, development and innovation will be delivered to support partnership working, preventing offending and promoting positive outcomes for people going through, or at risk of being drawn into, the criminal justice system.

Community Justice Scotland has responsibility for delivering learning to Criminal Justice Social Work (CJSW). Given the statutory responsibilities of CJSW, the continuation and development of this function following its transfer to Community Justice Scotland is a priority. The delivery and development of this function also provides opportunities to work with other partners to identify or produce learning products which can broaden skill sets for all those working in the field of community justice whether they be within statutory Social Work, other statutory partners or the diverse third sector workforce.

Our learning products will ultimately benefit those accessing services and will incorporate learning outcomes which will enable the development of skills which address need and encourage resilience. Because the needs of those who come into contact with the justice system (or are at risk of doing so) are diverse and complex, we will engage with partners in housing, mental health, addiction services and many other areas to ensure that expertise is shared and enhances learning products through multiple agencies and sectors.

1. Background

1.1 The new model of community justice

Community Justice Scotland is the new national body for community justice in Scotland. Underpinned by the Community Justice (Scotland) Act 2016<sup>1</sup> and launched on 1st April 2017 our function is to create a more robust and effective community justice system based on local planning and delivery by a range of statutory and other partners, supported and guided by national leadership and oversight. Community Justice Scotland is based in Edinburgh but is a national body working across the whole of Scotland.

Section 32 of the Community Justice (Scotland) Act 2016 sets out the requirement for a strategy for learning, development and innovation with Section 33 of the Act requiring the strategy to be reviewed within five years of publication.

The vision articulated in the National Strategy for Community Justice<sup>2</sup> is to make “Scotland a safer, fairer and more inclusive nation where we prevent and reduce further offending by addressing its underlying causes; and we safely and effectively manage and support those who have committed offences to help them reintegrate into the community and realise their potential for the benefit of all citizens.” An Outcomes, Performance And Improvement Framework<sup>3</sup> (OPI) has been developed alongside the strategy to support continuous improvement for all partners. Both of these documents have informed this strategy and will continue to guide its future iterations. Our ambition is for learning, development and innovation to contribute to all three of the Quality Ambitions contained in the OPI framework:

1. Every person with lived experience of community justice has a positive story to tell of support for their desistance or integration into the community.
2. All partners work together in delivering improved community justice outcomes to achieve lasting change across Scotland.
3. Interventions have a sound evidence base and are proportionate to the need to prevent and reduce further offending and protect the public.

1.2 The challenging current context for public services

Scotland's public services face increasing challenges as a result of reductions in funding and the costs associated with an ageing population. This means that learning and innovation must be flexible and efficient to ensure workforces can benefit from new approaches and new technologies which enhance service delivery rather than disrupt workplaces. To ensure we are delivering appropriate learning and innovation support we must listen to those involved in the delivery of services and those making use of these services. In this way our products will assist service providers to maintain high standards of delivery in an increasingly challenging environment by remaining targeted where need is greatest and where long-term positive impact can be made.

1.3 Christie principles and what they mean for community justice

The Commission on the Future Delivery of Public Services<sup>4</sup> prioritised methods of working to deliver public services within increasingly restricted financial frameworks. These included working collaboratively and having an emphasis on prevention. Community Justice Scotland will work with stakeholders to develop and deliver services in partnership to prevent offending and reduce inequalities by building resilience through strengths-based approaches.

The Commission specifically recommended multi-agency training and this will be built into our strategy to complement a bottom-up, outcome-based approach which puts the needs of those accessing services at the heart of all that we do.

It is acknowledged within the Commission Report that suitably skilled, empowered staff can be a driving force for positive change. Community Justice Scotland will continue working with colleagues in organisations such as the Scottish Social Services Council (SSSC) to develop and publicise opportunities for inter-agency events which encourage staff development.

Existing learning products will be enhanced through collaboration with our partners, such as the Risk Management Authority (RMA) and the third sector, to identify new methods of content delivery. This will provide efficiencies for those accessing learning and reach more of those in the community justice workforce.

2. Our Vision for Learning, Development and Innovation

We will provide excellent and accessible opportunities for learning, development and innovation which add value to the capability, skills, knowledge and expertise of practitioners of community justice so that they can deliver better outcomes for individuals, families and communities.

2.1 What we want to achieve

By implementing the Learning, Development and Innovation Strategy we will:

1. Develop a flexible and inclusive learning framework which ultimately benefits those accessing services.
2. Enable our stakeholders to access required learning and innovation products in ways which are most efficient for their business within the current funding environment.
3. Stimulate a culture of innovation in the field of community justice which makes communities in Scotland safer and more resilient.

We will achieve this by:

- Working with partners to implement flexible frameworks and protocols for designing, delivering, evaluating and developing diverse learning and innovation products. These will facilitate high quality continuous professional development for those working in the area of community justice, empowering them to become agents of change in the lives of the people they work with and deliver better outcomes for communities.
- Operating as a national Hub for Learning, Development and Innovation where those working within the community justice sector can access high quality support and learning resources, exchange advice and best practice in networks and develop personal and organisational skill sets.
- Giving our partners opportunities to share examples of innovative practice through national and local events.

3. Our statutory partners and stakeholders

Community Justice Scotland has statutory partners outlined in the Community Justice (Scotland) Act 2016. They are:

- (a) each local authority,
- (b) each health board,
- (c) the Chief Constable of the Police Service of Scotland,
- (d) the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service,
- (e) Skills Development Scotland,
- (f) an integration joint board established by virtue of section 9 of the Public Bodies (Joint Working) (Scotland) Act 2014,
- (g) the Scottish Courts and Tribunals Service, and
- (h) the Scottish Ministers.

In addition to the above named, the Act also includes a duty to consult with “any third sector bodies involved in community justice”. The Learning, Development and Innovation function of Community Justice Scotland will seek to engage with a wide range of individuals and organisations, statutory and non-statutory, who can contribute to the development of community justice.

4. Previous consultation with stakeholders

In July 2013, the results of a public consultation entitled Redesigning the Community Justice System - A Consultation on Proposals<sup>5</sup> were published. The report references the Scottish Government's vision for a safe, fair and stronger Scotland which continues to this day in the Justice Vision for Scotland<sup>6</sup> published in July 2017. Community Justice Scotland has established a Learning, Development and Innovation Working Group at which representatives from key stakeholders attend and which will continue to develop into an effective vehicle for engagement around priorities.

You said - Within this report, the desire for the continuation of training provided within existing Community Justice Authorities (CJAs) was expressed. In addition there was emphasis placed on the need for appropriate investment in and expansion of the existing learning products to include more than just CJSW. Any expansion of the learning products would however, have to be balanced with the need for CJSW maintain its professional identity and be delivered within the context of training and support available for all Social Workers.

We will – In 2018/19 Community Justice Scotland will prioritise the continuation of learning delivery for CJSW. As part of this process however, there will be opportunities to compare the learning outcomes of existing products with the requirements of other stakeholders and plan for delivery to participants from diverse organisations. Consultation with a wide variety of stakeholders was undertaken in 2017 and core learning requirements prioritised and opinions around potential areas for development identified.

You said - To ensure that the requisite skills, knowledge, good practice, professional identity and understanding of roles is delivered by learning and development it was deemed imperative that learning and development be properly prioritised in budgets as opposed to being viewed as an “add-on”.

We will - By having a separate Learning, Development and Innovation department with its own budget, Community Justice Scotland has ensured that appropriate priority is given to this function. Continuous engagement with stakeholders and evaluation of products and activities will ensure that the benefits of emphasising learning are constantly highlighted.

You said - The consultation highlighted the need to have a learning model which had the appropriate blend of national training programmes and local input to content. The opportunity to ensure consistent quality of learning delivery (by having a national body) was recognised but there was concern at a potential loss of local knowledge and input to learning.

We will – By developing standard processes for preparing learning delivery, Community Justice Scotland can ensure that local variables which are relevant to learning outcomes are reflected in course content. Consistency of content can be ensured by developing career length learning pathways which include core learning products as well as opportunities for personal development and self-directed learning.

You said – The consultation generated expressions of interest in diverse methods of learning, both formal and informal. There was specific mention made of learning products requiring to be evidence-based and linked to outcomes.

We will – To ensure that diverse methods of learning are accessible to as much of the workforce as possible, we will work with stakeholders to identify the most effective way to enable learning to take place in environments most suited to modern working practices. This will involve evaluating the suitability of techniques such as distance learning, e-learning and flipped learning (amongst others) for the development and enhancement of skills. In conjunction with our key stakeholders we will review and, where appropriate, revise learning materials to ensure they reflect current best practice and are accessible to those who need them. As part of this approach, it is intended that any learning be aligned to an outcomes framework designed with practitioners and those accessing services.

5. Our Objectives

5.1 - COLLABORATION

Working with partners we will respond to the needs of our stakeholders and deliver high quality trauma-informed<sup>7</sup> learning and innovation across the community justice sector whilst recognising and highlighting good practice.

5.1.1 We will support partners delivering trauma-informed learning to practitioners and developing innovative trauma-informed practice.

Community Justice Scotland will support the Scottish Government's commitment to developing a National Trauma Training Strategy. This will be achieved by co-producing and delivering with our partners, and being involved in reviews of products. We will utilise the knowledge and skills framework for the Scottish workforce developed by NHS Education Scotland and the forthcoming Trauma Training Strategy to ensure that trauma-informed learning is delivered in a way which will influence practice to benefit those accessing services.

5.1.2 We will engage with stakeholders to develop solutions together.

By ensuring appropriate stakeholder representation on the Community Justice Scotland Learning, Development and Innovation Working Group, and involving people with lived experience, we will maintain dialogue with those whom our products can benefit most. Our approach will involve dialogue with victims and also look to identify where existing training can benefit other service providers in the public and third sector. We will also work with the Criminal Justice Voluntary Sector Forum (CJVSF) and local partnerships to map existing learning being delivered at a local level. In this way we can support, but also learn from, those with specialist skills and knowledge of different environments of need. Building on work already underway, we will examine how to ensure co-production is beneficial and properly evaluated. CJS will work with the Centre for Youth and Criminal Justice (CYCJ) and other key stakeholders in youth justice to identify training needs of those working in youth justice nationally.

<sup>7</sup> Traumatic events have been defined as: “an event, a series of events or a set of circumstances that is experienced by an individual as physically or emotionally harmful or life threatening” (SAMHSA, 2014)

5.1.3 We will use the knowledge and experience of practitioners and those with lived experience to shape learning and innovation products.

Working with colleagues in areas such as housing, mental health and addiction services, we will ensure that our learning products remain ultimately focused on achieving the best outcomes for those accessing services. This will include engagement with those with lived experience and must involve working with local partnerships and victims' groups to ensure greater understanding of how our learning products can ultimately benefit communities.

5.1.4 We will develop the Community Justice Scotland Learning, Development and Innovation Hub<sup>8</sup> with a practitioner led approach.

There is an opportunity to develop a practitioner-led digital hub to assist workers across all sectors with learning and innovation. Initial consultation with stakeholders has highlighted a need for an easy to access digital hub which hosts guidance documentation, examples of best / innovative practice, training materials, training calendars, e-learning products and research. Community Justice Scotland will produce a Digital Strategy for Learning and Innovation to facilitate this.

5.1.5 We will publicise the contributions which stakeholders make to wider positive social impact.

As part of wider Hub content, including examples in relevant learning products, the work of stakeholders will be presented within the context of contributions made to the achievement of National Outcomes.

5.1.6 Products to be delivered

1. Co-produced courses (including trauma informed learning)
2. Working Group membership rationale
3. Co-produced mapping of existing local and national learning products
4. Community Justice Scotland Digital Strategy for Learning and Innovation
5. Examples of work undertaken by Social Workers, third sector workers and statutory partners which by delivering community justice have contributed to the achievement of National Outcomes.

5.2 - CONTINUOUS IMPROVEMENT<sup>9</sup>

By fostering a culture of innovation and embedding this into learning design processes, we will ensure that our stakeholders are able to share new and established examples of best practice and benefit from lessons learned in evaluations

5.2.1 We will encourage incremental innovation to support existing best practice.

Working with colleagues in Community Justice Scotland and stakeholders, we will utilise an improvement science<sup>10</sup> approach that identifies future learning from current practice including trauma informed practices.

5.2.2 We will evaluate our products using robust models of evaluation, incorporating, where possible, the views of service users.

Evaluation of learning products and Hub content will utilise workplace evaluation through surveys and focus groups / workshops to ensure that skills and practices are benefitting those accessing services. We will utilise the quality guidelines implemented by Education Scotland to ensure that the evaluation and improvement of our curriculum offer is robust. Consultation around the development of existing products will be undertaken with partners such as the Risk Management Authority to ensure relevant experience in design and delivery of specific products is maximised.

5.2.3 We will ensure that the positive impact of innovation is publicised to demonstrate the benefit to our stakeholders and communities.

As part of the development of the Hub, guidance for content management and update will be produced to ensure that impact and process evaluations are captured and articulated to those who will benefit from the subsequent learning. This will include publicising pilot projects and toolkits from other sectors which nonetheless contribute to the achievement of community justice outcomes.

5.2.4 We will embed evidence-based innovation into reviews of learning content and strive to expand accreditation of products.

As part of our evaluation framework we will ensure that relevant learning points from innovation are captured and incorporated into learning products, whether as case studies or contributing to separate learning outcomes.

<sup>9</sup> Continuous improvement is an ongoing effort to improve products, services or processes.

<sup>10</sup> Improvement science is a concept which focuses on exploring how to undertake quality improvement by applying research methods to help understand what impacts on quality improvement.

5.2.5 We will support stakeholders across the country to share experiences and best practice.

Community Justice Scotland will engage with practitioners to ascertain most useful ways of sharing best practice, whether that be through online fora or at events.

5.2.6 Products to be delivered

1. Quality and Standards Framework aligned with Education Scotland quality indicators
2. Evaluation framework
3. Digital hub content protocols and procedures
4. Co-produced mapping of existing local and national learning products
5. Regular consultation with stakeholders re sharing best practice

5.3 - CAREER LENGTH DEVELOPMENT

To build resilience into the community justice workforce we will ensure that diverse learning opportunities are available to a wide range of practitioners which will foster continuous learning in an effective and efficient manner.

5.3.1 We will publicise opportunities for learning to those working in the field of community justice.

As part of the continuation of CJSW learning delivery we will produce a National Training Plan. Further learning opportunities will be publicised on the Digital Hub and highlighted to stakeholders at appropriate fora. Working with CJVSF we will also highlight learning products delivered by third sector partners and work to address the learning requirements of third sector colleagues.

5.3.2 We will work to sustain a culture of self-directed and trauma informed learning.

Working with our partners, we will empower the community justice workforce to proactively identify and where appropriate, source learning products. Utilising existing learning packages, such as those provided by SSSC, we will encourage new methods of learning for the workforce.

5.3.3 We will identify methods of delivering learning to broaden access to products.

Community Justice Scotland will develop diverse e-learning products to complement and extend the existing learning which has been developed by our partners. Where appropriate, we will co-create cost effective, sustainable and accessible e-learning products designed to complement learner focused face to face training. We will construct our definition of quality around the understanding that technologies are modes for better enabling learning so that we do not deploy e-learning needlessly. By delivering accessible and robust e-learning Community Justice Scotland will work to meet the skills agenda for Scotland's digital future.

5.3.4 We will encourage cross sector participation in the learning and innovation environment.

Community Justice Scotland will work with learning providers and our academic partners to offer accredited qualifications that provide (inter)national recognition of learning and access to a broad range of progression routes. We will proceed on the basis that the training we provide should offer genuine opportunity for life-long career enhancement as well as to enhance the praxis of the workforce in line with national occupational standards. Our learning programmes will be modular and tiered to provide personalised learning pathways that reflect the diverse needs and ambitions of workers.

5.3.5 We will champion professions in community justice as rewarding and fulfilling for those who choose them.

The Hub will be a conduit for examples of how practitioners are acting as agents of change in the lives of those they work with. This message will be further delivered through inputs delivered to other agencies and social media.

5.3.6 Products to be delivered

1. National Training Plan
2. Co-produced courses (including trauma informed learning)
3. Community Justice Scotland Digital Strategy for Learning and Innovation
4. Quality and Standards Framework aligned with Education Scotland quality indicators

6. How will we achieve this together?

Currently, learning products relevant to community justice practitioners are delivered by a diverse range of organisations across Scotland. This approach risks inconsistency in the availability of learning and the development of an imbalance in terms of workforce skill sets. We want people in Scotland to be able to access consistently high quality services. To deliver this, diverse and robust skill sets underpinned by our shared values must be maintained through workforce development and strong relationships with those accessing services.

Community Justice Scotland will undertake a mapping exercise of existing products across the landscape to assist the compilation of a training needs analysis (TNA) which will refresh and update previously compiled exercises which focused mostly on CJSW requirements.

The term “innovation” is widely used today and may mean different things to different organisations. We will define it simply as the generation of new ideas, processes and methodologies and ways of working with other people and organisations. Both innovation and learning must be addressed in the context of relationships. Focus must be maintained on how products developed with our partners will enhance our engagement with not only partner organisations, but with people accessing services and the wider community.

It is imperative that innovation drives learning content to foster a culture of continuous improvement and enable practitioners to employ the most up-to-date best practice. To support this, the delivery of learning products with robust evaluation will inform user-based research which, combined with horizon scanning, social impact measurement and systems thinking, will serve as drivers for innovation.

Part of the function of Community Justice Scotland is the establishment and maintenance of a Learning, Development and Innovation Hub. This function will seek to provide:

- a national training schedule and a strategic approach to workforce development;
- a platform for highlighting new research and to enable opportunity for debate around future research;
- opportunities for practitioners to contribute to discussion around the development of new community justice training programmes as required, and facilitating and creating practitioner networks; and
- knowledge exchange such as collaborating with other organisations; bodies and professions to facilitate the sharing of best practice.

Part of the Hub will be a digital platform for practitioners which will host learning material, guidance documentation, research, case studies and a discussion forum.

To ensure that the Hub is a resource which provides benefit to our stakeholders we will design a framework to identify, present and assess content in terms of relevance and demand. Content must be practitioner-led, multi-disciplinary and should include guidance, examples of best practice, evaluation, examples of innovation, learning materials and basic e-learning packages.

Key contributors to the Hub will be practitioners within the field of community justice and those with lived experience. As well as ensuring content is practitioner-led, this will also enable content to be linked to improved outcomes by linking products to behaviours and subsequent impacts on people accessing services. Formal engagement through the Community Justice Scotland Academic Advisory Group, the Learning, Development and Innovation Working Group, the Community Justice Co-ordinators' Network and the Lived Experience Core Group will facilitate the sharing of views and ideas about how to maintain relevance and user engagement with the Hub.

7. Leaner Learning and Efficiency

Community Justice Scotland will adopt a pragmatic, blended approach to learning that better meets the needs of the workforce by combining curated e-learning products with face to face training. Blended learning will mitigate disruption to the workforce.

More comprehensive online learning and professional development will also allow those involved in delivering community justice to set the pace of their own learning while maintaining their efficacy in their core businesses. Consultation with partners across the sector reveals that this is a key concern for small teams where resilience is destabilised by removing staff from their workplace for face to face training.

We will use the capabilities of e-learning analytics to capture rich data to drive improvement for future iterations of our products and services. This will be complemented by ongoing consultation with stakeholders to inform gap analysis and to better understand the profile of digital capabilities across the workforce. We will conduct practitioner focused research to maintain our position at the vanguard of learning and enabling technologies.

8. Projected outcomes

COLLABORATION
Product	Timescale	Outputs	Outcomes
Co-produced learning	December 2018	1.) Learning products delivered to stakeholders in conjunction with partners by end of 2018	1.) Products are coordinated for a wider audience and tie in community justice outcomes with wider National Outcomes. 2.) Increased quality of services and engagement with victims and those with lived experience re learning content.
Working Group membership rationale	April 2018	1.) Terms of Reference for Working Group updated	1.) Products are relevant and appropriately prioritised.
Co-produced mapping of existing local and national learning products	2018 - 2020	1.) Multi sector map of learning products undertaken by the end of 2018 2.) Learning plans designed / updated incorporating findings of TNA by March 2020	1.) Achieve a greater understanding and engagement of stakeholders' skills requirements and existing learning delivery 2.) Learning products deliver the relevant skills to stakeholders
Digital Strategy for Learning and Innovation	October 2018	1.) Content collection protocols published by July 2018 2.) Digital strategy published with the above by October 2018	1.) Hub content will be relevant, up to date and prioritised to meet practitioners' needs 2.) Methods of delivery on the Hub will enable stakeholders to more efficiently access learning
Examples of work published	December 2018	1.) Structured case studies and best practice examples	1.) Recognition of workforce

CONTINUOUS IMPROVEMENT
Product	Timescale	Outputs	Outcomes
Quality and Standards Framework aligned with Education Scotland quality indicators	April – December 2018	1.) Quality and Standards Framework 2.) Subject specific QA guidance for learning products	1.) Practitioners receive consistently high standards of learning 2.) Increased quality of service
Evaluation framework	April 2019	1.) Evaluation framework document 2.) Engagement with stakeholders to develop workplace evaluation protocols and service users feedback 3.) Engagement with accrediting bodies	1.) Standardised evaluation techniques for learning and innovation products 2.) Comprehensive evaluations of long term benefits to practitioners and service users 3.) Increased uptake of qualifications by workforce
Digital Strategy for Learning and Innovation	October 2018	1.) Content collection protocols published by June 2018 2.) Digital strategy published with the above by October 2018	1.) Hub content will be relevant, up to date and prioritised to meet practitioner's needs 2.) Methods of delivery on the Hub will be diverse and appropriate
Co-produced mapping of existing local and national learning products	2018 - 2020	1.) Multi sector map of learning products undertaken by the end of 2018 2.) Learning plans designed / updated incorporating findings of TNA by March 2020	1.) ## 8. Review

The Community Justice (Scotland) Act 2016 states that this strategy must be reviewed “no later than 5 years after the strategy is published”.<sup>11</sup> Due to Community Justice Scotland being a relatively young organisation, it is proposed to publish a review of this strategy after one year.
